

I'm not robot  reCAPTCHA

Continue

Php coding standards document

A comment in php code is a line that is not read as part of the program. Its sole purpose is to read someone who is editing code. So why use comments? So others know what you're doing. If you're working with a group of people or planning on someone else sometimes using a script, the comments tell other programmers what you've been doing at every turn. This makes it easier for them to work with the code and modify it if necessary. Remind me of what you did. While you may just be writing a quick script for yourself and don't see the need for comments, go ahead and add them in any case. Most programmers experienced a return to edit their own work a year or two later and had to figure out what they had done. Comments can remind you of your thoughts when you wrote the code. There are several ways to add a comment in PHP code. The first is using the `//comment` line. This single line style comments only comments to the end of the line or the current block code, which is next. Here's an example: `<?php echo hello; this is a comment echo there; ?>`; If you have one comment line, another option is to use `#sign`. Here is an example of this method: `<?php echo hello; #this is a comment echo there ; ?>`; If you have a longer, multi-line comment, the best way to comment is with `/` and `/` before and after a lengthy comment. You can contain several lines of comments in a block. Here's an example: `<?php echo hello; /* With this method you can create a larger text box and it will all be annotated / echo there ; ?>`; Although you can nest comments in comments in PHP, do so carefully. Not all of them nest just as well. PHP supports C, C++ and Unix shell-style comments. C style comments end at `first/meet`, so don't nest C style comments. If you work with PHP and HTML, be aware that HTML comments don't make anything look like PHP parser. They will not work as planned and are likely to perform some functions. So, stay away from: `<!--Coment -->`. Last updated on November 5th, 2020 No one likes failing. The fear of failure can be so powerful that avoiding failure eclipses motivation for success. Uncertainty about what wrong causes many people to subconsciously sabotage their chances of success. Fear is part of human nature. As an entrepreneur, I faced the same fear. My ego and identity overlap with my work, and when it didn't go according to plan, I completely shut down. I've overcome this unhealthy relationship with fear, and I believe you can, too. Together we will explore how you can use failure to your advantage instead of letting it run your life. We will also look at how to overcome the fear of failure so that you can enjoy success in your work and life. What is fear of failure? If you're afraid of failure, it causes you to avoid potentially harmful situations. Fear of failure keeps you in pursuit, creates self-doubt, stalls progress, and can lead you to go against your causes fear of failure? Here are the main reasons why fear of failure exists: Patterns of childhood hyper-critical adults cause children to internalize harmful thinking. They set ultimatums and rules based on fear. This makes children feel the constant need to ask permission and reassessment. This need for validation is transferred into adulthood. Perfectionism perfectionism is often the cause of fear of failure. For perfectionists, failure is so horrible and humiliating that they don't try. Stepping outside your comfort zone becomes scary. Over-Personalization ego can lead us to over-identify with failures. It's hard to look beyond failure on things like quality of effort, increasing circumstances, or growing opportunities. False Self Esteem People with true confidence know that they will not always succeed. A person with fragile self-confidence avoids risks. They'd rather play it safe than try something new. As fear of failure keeps you backUnhealthy organization culture Too many organizations today have a culture of excellence: a set of organizational beliefs that any failure is unacceptable. Only pure, immaculate success will do. Imagine the stress and terror in an organization like this. Constant covering the smallest spots. Wild finger-pointing as everyone tries to shift the blame for the inevitable turmoil to someone else. Lying, cheating, falsifying data, and hiding problems—until they become crises that resist being hidden for longer. Miss out on valuable opportunities If some people don't get a complete answer because they lure some early success, many others fail because of their ego-driven commitment to what worked in the past. You often see this in older people, especially those who made their names by introducing some critical changes years ago. They shy away from further innovations, fearing that this time they could fail, reducing the brilliance they are trying to keep around their names from last year's triumph. Besides, they reason the success of something new could even prove that those accomplishments they have made in the past haven't been that great after all. Why take risks when you can hang on to your reputation by not doing anything? These people are so deeply invested in their egos and the glory of their past that they prefer to set aside opportunities for future glory rather than risk even the possibility of failure. High Achievers Become Losers Every talent contains the opposite, which sometimes turns into a problem. Successful people like to win and achieve high standards. It can make them so terrified of failure that it ruins their lives. When a positive trait, such as success, becomes too strong in one's life, it's on its way to becoming a major obstacle. Success is a strong value for many successful people. They built their lives on it. They achieve everything they do: school, college, sports, art, hobbies, work. Each new success contributes to the strength of value in their lives. Gradually, failure becomes unthinkable. Maybe I've never disappointed in anything I've done yet, so have no experience of climbing over it. Failure becomes the highest nightmare: a terrible horror movie that must be avoided at all costs. The easiest way to do this is to never take the risk, hold tight to what you know you can do, protect yourself, work the longest hours, double and triple check everything, and be the most conscientious and conservative person in the universe. If constant hard work, hard work, brutal work schedules and harrying subordinates won't avert the possibility of failure, use every other possible means to keep it going. Falsifying numbers, hiding something negative, hiding bugs, avoiding customer feedback, constantly shifting blame for mistakes to someone too weak to defend themselves. Loss of creativity Over-achieve to destroy your own peace and the lives of those who work for them. People too attached to goodness and morality are self-righteous zealots. Those whose values for building close relationships take an unbalanced shot into choking their friends and family with constant displays of affection and demands for love in return. Everyone likes to succeed. The problem dawns when the fear of failure is dominant, when you can no longer accept the necessity of making mistakes, nor recognize the importance of trial and error in finding the most creative solution. The more creative you are, the more mistakes you will make. Deciding to avoid mistakes will destroy your creativity, too. The balance counts more than you think. Some tartness must season the sweetest meal. A little selfishness is valuable even in the most caring person. And a little failure is necessary to maintain every view of success. We hear a lot about being positive. Perhaps we must also recognise that the negative parts of our lives and experiences have an equally important role to play in finding success, at work and in life. How to overcome the fear of failure (Step by Step)1. Find out where fear comes from Ask yourself what the main cause of your negative beliefs might be. When you look at the four main causes of fear of failure, which ones resonate with you? Write down where you think fear comes from and try to understand it as an outsider. If that helps, imagine you're trying to help one of your best friends. Perhaps your fear stems from something that happened in childhood, or deep-seated insecurity. Naming a source of fear takes some of his power. 2. Reframe beliefs about your goal with all or nothing mentality will leave you with anything ever. They have a clear vision for what you would like to achieve, but they involve learning something new in your goal. If you always strive for improvement and learning, you are much less likely to fail. At Pixar, people are actually encouraged to fail early and fail quickly. They encourage experimentation and innovation so that they can stay This thinking involves failure, but as long as they achieve their vision of telling great stories, all stumbling blocks are just opportunities to grow. 3. Learn to think positively in many cases you think what you say yourself. Your internal dialogue affects how you react and behave. Our society is obsessed with success, but it is important to remember that even the most successful people are faced with failure. Walt Disney was once fired from the newspaper because they thought he lacked creativity. Next, he found an animated studio that failed. He never gave up, and now Disney is a household name. Steve Jobs was also once fired from Apple before returning as the face of the company for many years. If Disney and Jobs believed in negative feedback, they wouldn't have done it. It is up to you to notice your negative self talk and identify triggers. Replace negative thoughts with positive facts about yourself and the situation. You'll be able to create new mental scripts that you can achieve when you feel negativity creeping in. Visualize all the potential results The uncertainty about what happens next is frightening. Take the time to visualize the possible results of your decision. Think about the best and worst-case scenarios. You will feel better if you have already had the opportunity to mentally prepare for what might happen. The fear of the unknown may keep you from taking on a new job. Consider the pros and cons, and imagine the potential successes and failures of making such life-changing decisions. Knowing how this might turn out could help you get away with it. 5. Look at the worst-case scenario There are times when the worst case could be absolutely devastating. In many cases, if something bad happens, it won't be the end of the world. It is important to define how bad the worst case scenario is in the grand scheme of your life. Sometimes we give situations more energy than they deserve. In most cases, the failure is not permanent. For example, when you start a new business, it is bound to be a learning experience. You will make decisions that do not come out, but often that discomfort is temporary. You can change your strategy and bounce. Even in the worst case scenario, if a perceived failure leads to the end of this business, it could be a trigger for something new. 6. Have a backup plan It never hurts to have a backup plan. The last thing you want to do is scramble for a solution when the worst has happened. The old guidance is solid wisdom: Hope for the best, get ready for the worst. Having a backup plan gives you more confidence to move forward and take calculated risks. You may have applied for a grant to fund an initiative at work. At worst, if you don't get a grant, are there other ways you could get funding? There are usually more ways to solve the problem, so having a backup is a great way to reduce anxiety about possible failure. 7. Learn from what happens may not go the way you planned, but that doesn't automatically mean you've failed. Learn from what arises. Even a less than ideal situation can be a great opportunity to make changes and grow. Sometimes you win, sometimes you learn. Dig deep enough, and you're bound to find a silver lining. When you learn that failure is an opportunity for growth instead of the death penalty, you conquer the fear of failure. For more tips on how to overcome the fear of failure, check out the video below: Final thoughts on overcoming fear of failure, we can start by figuring out where it came from and reframing the way we feel about failure. When failure is a chance to grow, and you've looked at all the possible outcomes, it's easier to overcome fear. Stay positive, have a backup plan, and learn from what happens. Your failures will be a source of education and inspiration rather than humiliation. I didn't fit. I just found 10,000 ways it won't work. -Thomas A. Edison Failure can be a blessing in disguise. Go laughily in the direction of your dreams and long-term goals. More tips on conquering FearFeatured photo credit: Patrick Hendry via unsplash.com unsplash.com